

SASPOWORLD CONTENT

INT. RUINED BUILDING - DAY

DUST motes dance in thick shafts of sunlight piercing through gaping holes in a concrete wall. The air is heavy, acrid with the scent of pulverized stone and lingering smoke. The skeletal remains of a once-proud structure loom around, rebar twisted like grotesque roots.

CHANDRA (30s, lean, alert, with the focused intensity of someone who has seen too much) presses against a crumbling pillar. His breathing is shallow, controlled. His eyes, dark and intelligent, scan every shadow, every broken brick. A deep, distant BOOM shakes the ground, showering him with fine dust. He doesn't flinch.

SOUND of a small, metallic CLICK - nearby, too close.

Chandra freezes. His gaze snaps to a shadowed archway. A figure emerges from the gloom.

THE ASSASSIN (30s, precise, athletic, dressed in practical, dark combat gear) is a silent predator. She holds a short, wickedly sharp DAGGER, its blade catching a sliver of light. Her movements are fluid, almost graceful, but terrifyingly efficient.

Chandra's hand instinctively goes to his waist - empty. He's unarmed.

The Assassin lunges, a blur of motion.

Chandra reacts instantly, a primal instinct honed by survival. He sidesteps, ducking under her sweeping knife-hand. The blade whistles past his ear.

He shoves her hard against a damaged wall. Plaster CRUMBLES.

The Assassin grunts, her expression cold. She spins, slashing. Chandra weaves, a rapid series of evasive footwork. He's agile, his movements hinting at a practiced discipline, almost like a dance of survival.

He grabs a loose length of REBAR - twisted, jagged - from the floor. Not a weapon, but a shield.

CLANG! The Assassin's dagger strikes the rebar. Sparks fly.

Chandra parries another strike, the rebar vibrating in his grip. He pushes forward, using the rebar to keep her at bay, forcing her to retreat momentarily. He eyes a broken staircase, half-collapsed, leading to the floor below.

The Assassin narrows her eyes, frustration flickering. She feints right, then strikes left, low. Chandra blocks with the rebar, but the force sends a jolt up his arm.

He sees an opening - a slight overextension. He drops the rebar, uses both hands to grab her wrist, twisting hard.

The Assassin lets out a sharp, guttural sound. Ayyyo! she spits, trying to yank her arm free.

Chandra uses her momentum, slamming her arm against a jagged concrete edge. The dagger CLATTERS to the ground.

She snarls, all feral rage now. She headbutts him. CRACK! Chandra stumbles back, clutching his nose. Blood immediately streaks across his lips.

Patti! Chandra curses, a guttural growl escaping him.

The Assassin sees her dagger. She lunges for it.

Chandra, despite the pain, is quicker. He kicks the dagger, sending it sliding across the dusty floor, out of her reach, towards the edge of a collapsed floor.

She turns on him, fists flying, a flurry of precise, powerful blows. Chandra blocks, parries, his face grim. He takes a punch to the gut, doubling over.

The Assassin aims a kick at his head. Chandra drops to one knee, narrowly avoiding it. He spins, sweeps her leg.

The Assassin loses balance, tumbling towards the edge of the collapsed floor, where her dagger glints precariously close to the precipice.

She catches herself, hanging precariously, one hand scrambling for purchase on a broken beam, the other reaching for her dagger. Her fingers brush it.

Chandra sees his chance. He sprints to a nearby broken support column, which still has a sturdy, but loose, metal beam jutting out. He pushes it, hard.

The beam CREAKS, groans, and then starts to tilt.

The Assassin looks up, her eyes wide with sudden realization. Daivame! she screams, her voice losing its composure.

The beam swings down, NOT hitting her, but slamming into the concrete floor RIGHT NEXT TO HER, sending a violent shudder through the already unstable structure.

More debris RAINS down. The floor around her CRACKS further.

Chandra doesn't wait. He turns, running towards a large hole in the outer wall, partially obscured by hanging wires and twisted metal.

The Assassin, momentarily stunned and pinned by the shifting rubble, sees him go. She struggles, letting out a frustrated scream.

Chandra scrambles through the opening.

EXT. RUINED BUILDING - DAY

Chandra emerges onto a rubble-strewn street. The war-torn city stretches out before him – more skeletal buildings, distant SMOKE plumes, the CHATTER of automatic gunfire like a distant, angry hum.

He doesn't look back at the building. He can't. He glances down at his bloody hands, then at the blood on his shirt.

Theernnille Ishtare, he mutters under his breath, his voice raw but determined. Ini njaan varum. (Ishtar, it's not over. Now I will come.)

He takes one last look at the desolate landscape, a flicker of something ancient and resolute in his eyes. Then, he melts into the shadows of the destroyed cityscape, a lone figure moving towards an unknown future.